Inclusion in this publication is voluntary. There are other farmers and farm markets not listed in this directory that supply food to retail businesses, food processors, restaurants, wholesale food businesses and consumers.

Greetings from Penn State,

The idea of buying fresh, local food has gotten lots of attention these days...but it's nothing new to us. For more than 15 years we've been producing Fresh From Bucks County Farms, the directory of local producers that you are holding.

Although the total number of farms and farm acreage has declined over the years, we still have more than 50 local agricultural producers that sell directly to the consuming public. It's good for you...the best and freshest locally produced food. It's good for producers...retail sales help them stay profitable.

Beyond this, there are many benefits to local consumers and producers getting together. Kids see where their food comes from, efficiencies in food distribution are realized and relationships between farm and non-farm families are created. It's all good.

Have fun while you enjoy the bounty of local food, Fresh From Bucks County Farms.

Sincerely,

Scott D. Guiser

Garden Questions?...Answered Here!

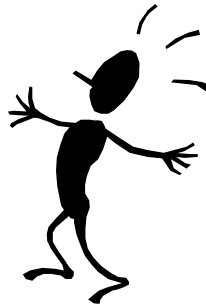

Beets bit the dust? Grubs ate your lawn? Bagworms got you down? Call us, at 215-345-3283 or visit us at Neshaminy Manor Center, Doylestown with your gardening questions.

Penn State Cooperative Extension has answers to almost every gardening question. Backed by research-based knowledge, we can help you establish a new lawn, diagnose tree and shrub problems, identify household pests and even teach you how to grow fruits and vegetables in your own back yard.

Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences produces thousands of publications that help gardeners succeed. From asparagus to zucchini we've got current information on vegetable gardening. Ants, termites, and other destructive pests can cause serious household damage...and we can help diagnose and prescribe treatment for these problems. Landscape problems? Give us a call. We have information on pruning, pest management and other aspects of landscape care.

Penn State College of Agricultural Sciences is also on the web. You can search this site for publications and frequently asked garden questions at <http://consumerhorticulture.psu.edu/>

But for the personal touch with your gardening questions, call or visit us. We're ready to help.
